Hi Reilly,

Reading a dozen resumes and cover letters must be a lot of strain on your eyes... ☹

Well, you are in luck! ☺ I am not a big fan of writing about how awesome I am, so I will try my best to demonstrate. (I am doomed if you are reading this off a paper)

I am a driven individual that loves to solve complex problems using elegant, simple code. As an example, check out this 3D Sphere I made using some HTML and CSS only! Amazing.

I enjoy, collaborating with people across disciplines. As an example, a team made up of two developers and an architect can create a game where you have to die to advance! My contribution was in a form of reusable C# scripts, which my team used to build the game. What about an infinite swimmer, made by two developers and an artist? It was a fun one, since I was responsible for getting the waves to function! (Both of the games were made using Unity and C#) The point I am making is, people with different perspectives make cool things!

Collaboration is awesome, but it is not often that one gets to meet up with people at a game jam or a hackathon, to get some shit done. You will be pleased to hear that I keep myself busy on me (not a typo) own time. Take this Time Pilot clone for instance. I made that using SFML and C++ (big boy language)! Now you might be thinking, "Son, this ain't a game development company!" Yeah, fair enough ... I do not only make games! Checkout a website I made for me friends to promote their game/company while they were still students. Guess what, it is responsive too! Made from scratch using some vanilla HTML, CSS, JavaScript and tiny bit of PHP. Not to mention, I have been submitting challenges for Shopify internships for a while, here are a few of the older ones. Yeah, this is not my first rodeo. ☺

Frankly, every time I talk with Shopifolk, or get in vicinity of Shopify my heart skips a beat. I am in love with Shopify and incredibly excited at the thought of being able to join this hive of talented, beautiful people.

That's that! Thanks for reading!
